Hello ARC supporters and Happy New Year!

2015 has already become a bustling month for neighborhood councils in our region with campaigns underway, school board and council district townhalls and various issues and updates on the concerns we've been working on in the region.

NEW Meeting Date

Starting with our first 2015 meeting, ARC will be changing its meeting date to the 2nd Tuesday of every month. Our first meeting we'll be joined by Department of Transportation General Manager Seleta Reynolds who will be sharing an update on LA's mobility plan and will be discussing the department's priorities in 2015. We will be foregoing a January meeting to make the adjustment for meeting earlier in the month in February and moving forward.

School Board Townhall

NC leaders from various neighborhoods have collaborated to bring an LAUSD School Board Townhall taking place Thursday, February 5th at 7pm in Eagle Rock. The flier is attached below and the event will be moderated by KPCC Education Reporter Annie Gilbertson. A flier in Spanish is also available.

March 3rd Charter Amendments

LA Voters this year will be presented with a choice to shift LA City and LAUSD elections to coincide with state and federal elections. In the coming month, neighborhoods groups and local political clubs including the East Area Progressive Democrats and the Democrats for Neighborhood Action have come out strongly against the shift. Currently, LA municipal elections belong entirely to Angelenos, and are free from the nationwide SuperPAC and outside interest media spending that pollutes and drowns-out the voice of local concerns. Former LA City Clerk under Richard Riorden, J. Michael Carney, has penned a piece against the move below. NCs interested in hearing about the dangers of the shift can contact me directly to arrange a speaker at an upcoming meeting.

January 16, 2015 4:57 PM

LOS ANGELES (CBSLA.com) — Angelenos are asking state officials to bring some new safety measures to the city's oldest freeway.

An online petition on Change.org launched in December calls upon State Senator Kevin de León to address what it describes as an “increasingly dangerous situation” on a historic stretch of the 110 Freeway that runs between downtown Los Angeles and Pasadena.

Built in 1940, the Arroyo Seco Parkway – otherwise known as State Route 110 – was declared to be the “first freeway in the West” by then California Gov. Culbert Olso and was initially designed to handle a fraction of the traffic it currently experiences today.

The petition calls for officials to dedicate the Parkway's Avenue 43 north and southbound exit and entry ramps as exclusive on/off lanes to cut down on potential traffic hazards and accidents.

Supporters say the move is necessary since the highway provides key access points to historical monuments, such as the Lummis House and the Southwest Museum, and serves as one of the more scenic stretches of road in L.A. County.

Upon conversion of most of the northbound and southbound right hand lanes to exit/ entrance only, "exiting and entering will become safer immediately," according to the petition.

As of Jan. 16, nearly 600 supporters had signed the petition.

The Arroyo Seco Parkway Corridor Partnership Plan (PDF) was completed in 2012 by CalTrans, but the project has been delayed by funding issues.

A Caltrans report on several proposed changes to the freeway is expected to be completed by March. Locals say the parkway's sudden exits that drop from 55 miles per hour to 5 on short ramps with hairpin turn cause legendary accidents and serious traffic troubles.

CBS2's Laurie Perez spoke to several people who transverse the freeway who would like to see changes made. They believe the 1940s road design is far from catching up to 21st century traffic and technology.

"Almost heartbreaking when you hear people say well I knew someone who died out there," said Jack Fenn one of the petition organizer.

"I'm slowing down and some guys trying to go around me at like 70," said Dustin Pence, "and he's not gonna make it, so I have to abort the mission and pull back into traffic so this guy doesn't nail me."

Ami Blachowiak says that any time she's expected guests to her home, she warns them about the exit. "The first thing we tell them, we give em our address and then we say the exit is a death trap," says Blachowiak.

Fenn and supporters met Friday morning with de León's office and were told within three weeks, crews will begin to install new flashing lights and signs alerting drivers to some of the more sudden exits and entrances.

Cold war between bike activists and Councilman Gil Cedillo may be thawing

Los Angeles City Councilman Gil Cedillo set off a small political firestorm in his district last summer, putting off plans for a Figueroa Street bike lane and enraging a potent group of advocates.

Cycling activists were fierce in their criticism of the councilman, stressing that he promised two years ago to install bike lanes on the north-south corridor. They nicknamed him "Road Kill Gil" on social media. They showed up uninvited at events to denounce him. They held a "Die-In" outside his downtown apartment building.

Behind the scenes, however, a different exchange of ideas has been taking place. Cedillo aides have met twice in recent days with representatives of the Los Angeles County Bicycle Coalition to discuss ways of making Figueroa safer for pedestrians and bicyclists. The coalition, which had been at odds with Cedillo most of last year, now sounds optimistic.

"We're pretty confident that when a discussion of the merits takes place, the [proposal] with the bike lanes will win out," said Eric Bruins, the coalition's planning and policy director.

The thaw in the cold war between Cedillo and some prominent bicycle advocates raises larger and intriguing questions: Did Cedillo engage in talks because of the pressure, much of it unpleasant, from activists? Or did angry rhetoric and personal attacks make it harder for the two sides to reach common ground?

The answers hold wider meaning for L.A. residents, businesses and nonprofit groups. To take on a sitting politician and lose is to risk four, eight, even 12 years in the political wilderness, depending on how many terms that politician serves. "This is political strategy 101," Bruins said. "It isn't just about bikes. This is anybody who's trying to change policy in this city."

MONTECITO HEIGHTS — The bobcat, although rare in urban settings, sometimes crosses paths with a surprised Angeleno in their neighborhood. A bobcat was photographed last year in Debs Park, and The Eastsider has received unconfirmed reports of bobcats in the hills of Eagle Rock, Highland Park and Silver Lake. After another recent sighting in Montecito Heights, a wildlife expert was invited to give residents a lesson in Bobcat 101.

More often than not, bobcat sightings are false alarms, said Emmanuel Lara, formerly with the Wildlife Division of the National Park Service, who spoke at a recent committee meeting of the Arroyo Seco Neighborhood Council. But bobcats do roam within the city limits of Los Angeles. They weigh about 15 to 20 pounds and have a striped or spotted coat that is either grayish brown or tan with white, said Lara, who participated in a lengthy bobcat study in the Santa Monica Mountains. Bobcats are shy animals and nocturnal hunters that keep the rodent population in check, he said.

Some other basic information, according to an account of Lara's presentation, about the animals :
Bobcats are very solitary animals.

A male bobcat does not allow other males to intrude in its territory, but will allow a female to co- habitate his territory. They usually mate in December.

Females usually bear litters of between 1 to 4 cubs in February. The cubs will stay with their mother for about 12 to 16 months and then will be forced out by their mother to look for their own territory.

Bobcats, according to an account of Lara's presentation, don't pose much of a threat to humans or their pets. Dog and cat owners have much more to fear from coyotes than bobcats.

"There has never been a report a bobcat attacking a human in Southern California," he said. "They are not dangerous."

Bobcats, however, do have to worry about humans. At least when humans use rat poison outdoors. The rodents that consume the poison and die outdoors can become part of the bobcat's food chain, which includes rabbits, skunks, possums, squirrels, gophers, moles, field mice and other rodents.

What do when you encounter a bobcat? Lara said it's just best to leave the animal alone. "You want to give them space, at least 20-30 feet," he said.

Walnut Canyon is a large pristine area west of Division in Glassell Park. Last weekend I noticed all the trees are red marked for cutting. Plans have been submitted to build 32 homes.

You can see photos and a map here: Walnut Canyon trees tagged for cutting 1/18/2015
<http://share.pho.to/8fsI8>

Every tree in Walnut canyon was recently red sprayed near the root and marked with a round metal tag. We fear they are about to be cut. Walnut Canyon is locat...

We contacted Cedillo's office and they were like "Let us know if they cut them"....

Normally I'm not against development but this is a beautiful site with many mature trees. I can think of many uglier spaces (starting with our strip malls) that could be bulldozed for development.

Keep in touch through the website.
